

To whom it may concern,

Creating benefit districts is more of a benefit to developers than to homeowners. The developer is creating an area to build and making a profit while passing the expense on to the homeowners already in the area. In my personal case the benefit district that is trying to be put on my property is for a road that I will literally never use which is ridiculous. Developers should be responsible through their planning to build the infrastructure needed for the area they are making a profit on without pushing it off to current homeowners. I expect you will make the right decision and not allow these expenses to be passed on any longer.

Thank You for your time serving this community.

Brian Haug